Whiskey OR whisky?

The short answer: the Irish (and most others) use an "e" when they talk about their whiskey. When it's made in Scotland, though, you'd best leave the "e" out—lest you fancy the prospects of a burly, kilt-wearin' Highlander tossing a caber right at your forehead.

The long answer? We're not sure, but we sure hope it involves centuries-old folklore full of knights, dragons and tracks of land. Anyway, we spells it the way we likes it. And you'll have to beat us at a bar room brawl to change our minds. We'll warn you, though, we brawl with the best of 'em.
